Dear Sir

In answer to the enquiry of Mr Albert Sellers I would respectfully state that his deposer contained quite an amount of sulfer which had to be removed before a correct assay could be obtained and he was mistaken about the fineness of his silver with the sulphur remaining with it. It could not have been more than 960. I don't think there could have been any loss of silver. If the sulphur had been removed before bringing here then there wd have been no dissatisfaction we wd have preferred to have returned but only refused to accommodate

Very Respectfully

Dear Sir

In answer to the enquiry of Mr. Albert Sellner, I would respectfully state that his deposit contained quite an amount of sulphur which had to be removed before a correct assay could be obtained and he was mistaken about the fineness of his silver with the sulphur remaining within. It could not have been more than 960. I don't think there could have been any loss of silver. If the sulphur had been removed before bring here then there would have been no dissatisfaction we would have preferred to have returned bar only refined to accommodate.

Very Respectfully,
